Kevin's World: Home Alone Without Guidance

CITI'S TAKE

After months of waiting, we finally have a better sense of what a Kevin Warsh FOMC meeting looks like. Greenspan-style limited forward guidance, hawkish dot plot upgrades, plus a renewed focus on inflation and price stability mean we added USD longs this week against NOK (outright trade) and HUF (re-hedging our long HGB 31 trade). The Iran MoU is meaningful and should have legs for further unwinds of oil beta trades. We also review the other G10 CBs this week.

New Regime for the Fed — Chair Warsh's first meeting was surprisingly hawkish. He discussed five task forces that cover much of the Fed's monetary policy umbrella and would be providing recommendations at the end of the year. Lack of forward guidance means that the Fed and markets will be much more data dependent, so rates and FX vol around key data events may rise. A hawkish Fed should support the USD; we stay long USDNOK and re-hedge our HGB 31s trade.

Forward policy proxy is hawkish — We approximate how hawkish/dovish forward Fed pricing is by regressing 1y1y forward OIS against 5y breakevens and SPX (detrended vs. 200dma). We find that current pricing is hawkish relative to where one would expect given inflation expectations and equity prices and show that this is historically associated with positive USD returns.

Iran MoU means oil proxy trades can continue to soften — Citi Commodity Strategists see Brent at $75 this quarter with further downside risk as the year progresses. In FX and rates, places that saw positive CTOT shifts (Norway) or externally driven hike pricing (Canada, UK) can see reversals. Fed pricing has not followed oil lower, unlike in the UK, where it has. This validates our view; as such, we are long USDNOK and received SFI and CORRA vs SFR (in Z6 futures). NB: Futures trading involves substantial risk of loss.

G10 central banks deliver mixed signals — Besides the Fed, this week brought us the latest BoE, BoJ, RBA, Riksbank, and Norges Bank views, which we review below. The BoE was uneventful so far, and politics is likely to matter more for markets, but labor leadership outcome remains highly uncertain. BoJ hiked by 25bp but with a 7-1 dovish split. Scandies central banks and RBA held policy rates though with hawkish tilts, more so Norges and RBA than Riksbank, as both central banks are experiencing domestic inflationary pressures that go beyond the external oil shock.

We Need To Talk About Kevin (and G10 CBs and Iran)

Hawkish Fed. Despite the dovish expectations for Chair Warsh, his first meeting was surprisingly hawkish driven by (1) nine of the 18 dots penciling a hike, (2) emphasis on price stability (with a stable labor market characterization), and (3) giving no future guidance while implying that the July meeting was live. The statement was also significantly shorter and removed guidance for future easing, though this was largely expected. Our US economists have pushed out their forecast, now expecting two cuts in 2026.

Buying dollars, we go long USDNOK. We had said in Global Macro Strategy – Views and Trade Ideas – Deal or no deal? a few weeks ago that we wanted to buy USD on dips. Our EUREKA model, which uses four fundamental signals (rates, equities, economic changes, and commodity terms of trade), has turned bullish on the dollar, with three of the signals (ex CTOT) pro USD. NOK, which strengthened with the rally in oil prices, should give back strength with the signing of the US–Iran MoU. As oil prices continue to decline and a hawkish Fed supports the dollar, USDNOK should rally. We also added a USDHUF hedge to our outstanding HGB 2031s position.

Adding SFRZ6 payer hedge. Post Fed meeting, we closed our Dec26/Dec 27 steepener. While we were correct in the hawkish Fed and higher rates, hikes were front-loaded into 2026 and 2027 kept some cut pricing, in line with the SEP. We also added a paid SFRZ6 against our two G10 receiver positions in Canada and the UK in the same size. NB: Futures trading involves substantial risk of loss.

Reiterate Trade: Buy USDNOK at 9.6139 in $26.2mio notional. Target 10.10, watch level 9.45. Risking $500k/0.5% of GMS portfolio. Pricing as of 17:48 EST on 16-Jun-26. Risk to the trade: prolonged rebound in oil prices.

Reiterate Trade Amendment: Pay SFRZ6 in 20k DV01 at 95.91 vs CORZ6 \(10k DV01\) and SFIZ6 \(10k DV01\). NB: Futures trading involves substantial risk of loss.

Fed policy proxy flagging as tight. To evaluate forward Fed expectations relative to broader economic conditions, we calculate the 1y rolling OLS residual of the 1y1y forward rate to 5y breakevens and SPX (de-trended vs. the 200dma). While we acknowledge that this is a somewhat parsimonious approach to evaluating policy tightness, we would highlight that the residual has historically aligned with periods associated with tightening/loosening FCIs, particularly when the signal deviates from zero for a sustained period. We flag that the residual is currently at 0.97, indicating that the 1y1y rate is 97bp over what would be considered “normal” given the previous year’s relationship between 1y1y rates, breakevens, and equities, suggesting that forward policy expectations are tight. We show below DXY returns associated with this degree of policy pricing tightness from a concurrent perspective (i.e., annualized average daily returns when the residual is in a specific range), as well as from a 3m forward return perspective (i.e., annualized 3m cumulative forward returns for each regime observation). For DXY, we find that the 1y1y residual between 0.8–1.0 is associated with strong returns both concurrently and over a 3m forward time horizon, in support of our bullish USD bias. However, we would also note that the mean-reverting nature of our proxy can potentially help to capture short-term USD peaks, considering that residual values > 1 are often associated with negative 3m forward DXY returns. As such, we remain bullish USD for now but are conscious that this indicator is close to signaling a less USD-bullish regime.

The selloff in 2y may have legs. Looking back at UST 2y move since the late 70s, Warsh has been the second most hawkish first-meeting FOMC chair (Figure 7). Historically, we find a change in new Fed chair leadership has often but durably been uncomfortable for 2y rates (Figure 8, Quantitative Global Macro Strategy - FOMC Warsh's first-day: a new Fed Chair tends to be typically hawkish).

Price stability, tasks forces, and data dependence. The most common theme from Chair Warsh's presser was price stability. This reminds us of his previous tenure on the Federal Reserve before back in 2008, when he still emphasized price stability despite inflation below the Fed's target at that time. In response to a reporter, he explicitly stated that while the 2% target is not under review, the inflation framework would be. He has already stated that he prefers the trimmed mean method of looking at core CPI, which is currently trending at 2.4%YoY. Figure 11 shows the mentions for each key word Chair Warsh used. Price stability and inflation (and task force) rank at the top. On the other hand, he characterized employment as stable and even said that some committee members said that the trend was improving. Our preferred measures of the labor market, continuing claims and the NFIB intentions for hiring have trended weaker in recent weeks, which suggest weaker June jobs report. In his introductory remarks he said there would be five task forces (Figure 9) analyzing nearly everything in the Fed's umbrella for monetary policy. They would start in coming weeks and conclude by the end of the year, meaning 2027 may be year of significant change for the FOMC.

#	Task Force	Core Mandate	Our questions
1	Fed Communications	Review the form and function of how the Fed communicates monetary policy to markets, households, and businesses	Future of the dot plot? Less speeches from all Fed Governors and regional Presidents? Changes in minutes?
2	Balance Sheet Policy	Assess the benefits and risks of the current ample reserves regime and the overall composition of the Fed's balance sheet	Composition of the balance sheet?
3	Data & Information Sources	Evaluate new information sources and consider methodological improvements to give policymakers more accurate, relevant, and real-time economic data	What private sector data will the Fed be incorporating? Will there be less revisions to the data?
4	Productivity & Jobs in an Era of Transformation	Survey the pace, reach, and economic impact of new general-purpose technologies – especially AI – and explore implications for the Fed's dual mandate	AI is inflationary? Jevons paradox? Signs of AI layoffs? How will productivity from AI be measured and will it justify lower real rates?
5	Inflation Frameworks	Examine the drivers of inflation from first principles and weigh the full range of ideas for delivering price stability in a changing economy	Housing may be measured differently now? More price scraping (less survey based)? Incorporation of trimmed mean CPI?

Less forward guidance means US data events should see higher vol. Chair Warsh said that "financial markets are probably the most important source of information to guide central bankers ... create a system [...] where markets are following data they efficiently think is reliable ... they'll come with better information through market prices to us." Part of this likely stems from the 2021 "inflation is transitory" debacle but also means that the Fed is likely to become most sensitive to the latest data point, like markets are. Rates and FX vol may be more elevated in the near term as Fedspeak becomes more limited. Forward guidance, if/when it is given, now may hold an outsized weight.

Iran MoU is a big deal – stay bullish risk and received selectively. Our Commodity Strategists think oil can move to $75/bbl in the next quarter (Cross-Commodity Outlook – The US-Iran MoU is a big deal, setting the stage for renewed oil surplus, higher metals prices): "In our view, the market is pricing the MoU itself, but not an agreement that secures SoH flows over the medium term; otherwise, crude oil prices would likely be ~$10–15/bbl lower than they are today. Limited appetite for renewed conflict from the US, and Iran signaling willingness to deal, point to selling summer oil rallies, in our view." Last week, we added SX5E and took off the front end payers in Europe and Australia.

US vs the rest. One notable dynamic combining the Iran deal and the Fed has been the de-coupling of Fed pricing from Brent prices (Figure 12). This has not been the case for G10 ex-US 2026 pricing vs Brent (Figure 13). In particular we show BoE pricing vs Brent; where the relationship has held, we get a similar story with G10 ex-US pricing more broadly.

G10 roundup: BoE, BoJ, RBA, Riks, Norges

UK – BoE & Burnham: stay bearish GBP FX and rec BoE x-market. The BoE was uneventful, with a 7-2 split to hold, and some slightly softer CPI projections, implying lack is opening up. Citi Economics maintain their view that the next move is a cut in Q2 2027 (UK Economics – BoE – Steady as she goes), and we remain received SFIZ6 (adding SFRZ6 payer hedge after the FOMC) and long EURGBP FX. In politics, we get the Makerfield by-election which will determine whether Andy Burnham can become an MP and kick off a leadership challenge against PM Starmer. There is considerable uncertainty on next steps; even if Burnham wins, there is no guarantee of a leadership challenge happening, or that he would be successful. If he loses, Labour MPs could still pivot support to other alternative leadership candidates like Raynor or Streeting. With so much in the air, we struggle to see clear tradeable implications from the result, with the next steps in the coming weeks more instructive.

BoJ delivers more of the same: a reluctant hike. The BoJ delivered 25bp rate hike to 1% in a 7–1 vote, with Policy Board member Asada dissenting, citing greater downside risks to production and employment. While the hike was widely expected, the dissenting vote sent a dovish signal to markets. PM Takaichi's first board member pick has already made clear its dovish stance. At the end of June, Ayano Sato, another reflationist, will also join the BoJ replacing Junko Nakagawa. Perhaps more important, the term of board members Hajime Takata and Naoki Tamura, the two most hawkish members, will end in July 2027. If the government appoints more reflationists to the board, it may mean the BoJ's hiking window will effectively end in Jun/Jul 2027. For Japanese assets, this implies that the reflation regime of i) higher term premium, ii) higher equities, and iii) weaker JPY is likely to continue, without intervention. Our economists expect the next hike to be in 6m, at the Dec 2026 meeting.

MoF slow to come to the JPY rescue, but we hold our USDJPY short. The MoF already intervened once in May to cap JPY weakness around USDJPY ~160.5, disclosing it had used a record JPY 11.7trn (Reuters). While the backdrop as highlighted above remains negative for JPY, we would stress that the potential end of the US–Iran war and the re-opening of the Strait should become a tailwind for Japan. If that tailwind fails to materialize for JPY, then the MoF could see that as enough reason to intervene again, especially as we have now crossed the previous intervention level. Hence, we remain short USDJPY entered in Tactically short USDJPY – Part II (21-May-2026).

RBA stays pat in hawkish hold. The RBA held interest rates in its June Monetary Policy Board (MPB) meeting following the 25bp hike delivered in May. The meeting carried a hawkish undertone, with Governor Bullock explicitly reminding markets that a hold does not preclude further tightening, especially given the ongoing labour market tightness. Citi economists maintain a 25bp hike call for this year. They expect inflation to remain too high for the Central Bank to ignore. Q2 trimmed-mean inflation is estimated at 0.9% QoQ (risk to 1.0%), and Q3 at 1.0% (risk to 1.1%). We entered a Z6 CAD receiver vs AUD payer in Warsh's Worries (14-May-2026). We took off the AUD leg with news over a US-Iran deal in Razor's Edge: Buy the Flush, Watch the Fed (12-Jun-2026). We think currently AUD front-end is fairly priced with roughly ~17bp priced in for 2026. NB: Futures trading involves substantial risk of loss.

Riksbank hawkish tilt, but conditional on protracted conflict. As expected, the Riksbank left its policy rate unchanged at 1.75%. The surprise was the slightly hawkish tilt reflected in the modestly higher rate path versus March — by 5bps in Q4 2026 and 8bps in Q1 2027, which signals the possibility for a rate hike already this year. The higher rate path is partially justified by the Riksbank's expectation of higher inflation ahead. While with near-term CPIF revised down (2026: 1.1% vs. 1.5% prior), 2027 was revised up (1.7% vs. 1.3%). That said, our economists believe the upward revisions may be already obsolete given the MPR forecasts were based on energy prices at the cut-off date of 10 June, meaning Brent was still around ~90$bb versus sub-80$ today, which reduces the risk of energy pass-through. The Central Bank also acknowledged that inflationary pressures linked to domestic factors are more subdued. Our economists believe the Riksbank is likely to remain on hold for the remaining of the year. While we agree we are unlikely to see any changes to the policy rate in 2026, we also think that the hawkish tilt (despite near-term inflation downward revisions) signals the next move is more likely to be a hike, than a cut. Hence, 2026/2027 front-end steepeners can make sense.

Norges Bank delivers hawkish hold, but oil trumps rates for NOK. The Norges Bank delivered a hawkish hold at 4.25% on June 18, as widely expected following the May hike, but the rate path was lifted +25bp versus the March MPR, implying at least one more hike this year. What we think is concerning for the Norges Bank relative to peers is that its inflation pressures are caused by domestic wage dynamics rather than the external oil supply shock. As our economist notes, the statement was blunt: "Inflation is too high, and the rapid rise in business costs in recent years will contribute to keeping inflation elevated ahead." Citi economists expect at least one more hike this summer and see August as the most likely timing. With respect to NOK, as highlighted above, we entered a long USDNOK trade in spot (Buying USDNOK, stopping out of Dec26/Dec27 steepener). We think US-Iran and oil matter more than what the Norges' policy decision is. Figure 18 below shows the r-squared of two different 1y rolling regressions: NOKSEK on oil (Brent) and NOKSEK on 2y rates differential, using weekly changes. Oil tends to dominate NOK.

For puts (or payers), the maximum potential loss (amount below the strike) would eventuate should the index price fall to zero. Sector index options are cash settled. Credit index options are physically settled. The above calculations do not include any additional fees or transaction costs. Note that ratio writing would leave the writer uncovered in one leg of the trade.
